

Jonathan Everett for FPC

Evidence – Innovation – Liberal Values

About me

I was deputy head of policy for the party between 2017-2020, supporting policy development on a wide range of areas – as well as working with FPC on the 2019 general manifesto.

I recently chaired the science and innovation policy working group, whose motion was passed earlier this year.

I'm currently head of policy and advocacy at a national charity – where my work focuses on improving evidence-based policy making and promoting public understanding of data and AI.

Priorities if elected

I would have three policy priorities:

- Ensure the Party continues to develop credible, liberal responses to AI and emerging technologies.
- Strengthen the Party's approach to evidence-based decision-making, especially on education, health, and the economy.
- Promoting transparency to fight misinformation and build public confidence.

What I would bring

It is important that our policies communicate our values. At the next election, we should have headline proposals that neatly encapsulate what we stand for: freedom, fairness and opportunity. I will focus on making sure we get this right.

I would also like to see the party be more responsive in its policy development. I'd use my experience to enable us to develop detailed and robust policy on a shorter timescale for especially topical and important subjects.

Policy papers I have worked on

- Science, Innovation and Technology (2025)
- Democracy and Public Debate (2021)
- United Against Crime (2019)
- A Fairer Share for All (2019)
- Eradicating Race Equality (2019)

Contact me: jonathanforfpc@gmail.com

I will make policy work smarter, faster, and stronger: evidence-based, values-driven, and inclusive.